Salina Tech progresses

Greg Nichols, president of Salina Area Technical College, told the club about Salina Tech's stature as the cutting edge for technical education in Kansas.

Nearly 10,000 students have achieved certification or licensure since the school opened in 1965. Of those, 82 percent stayed in Saline County.

One important aspect of technical training is how quickly students can enter the workforce with a relatively small amount of debt.

Nichols said a nursing program is in the works, which will help address an ongoing nursing shortage in Kansas.
